FOREST FIRES ARE CAUSING MUCH DAMAGE

In This State and People Begin to Realize Their Destructive Powers.

ELKINS, Nov. 18.—The loss of timber and of property by fires can only be brought home to the people of the state by such fires as have made their appearance in every section of the state during the last few weeks, burning over large areas of land and destroying everything in their path. With concerted action it is possible to prevent such fires or at least limit the area of destruction. That has been accomplished in many sections and it is the purpose of the next article in this series to show by contrast just what has been accomplished in the direction of limiting fires and saving property. Figures and facts will be given then showing what has been done in the protected area as contrasted with the losses sustained in the unprotected areas. Then and then only will it be realized by people in general just what the activity of fire protective associations in conjunction with the federal and state government means. The mountain fires now in evidence in nearly every section of the state bring home forcibly to people the necessity for some concerted action, such as has been tried with success in other heavily timbered states like West Virginia. As an illustration of the fire losses entailed take Jefferson county and the territory adjacent thereto. A good deal of timber has been destroyed by a fire which began on the east side of Maryland near Harpers Ferry, spreading to the western slopes. There was another fire on both slopes of the Blue Ridge mountains south of Harpers Ferry, extending from Jefferson county to Loudoun county, in which the timber and property loss was quite heavy. An area of between 500 and 1,000 acres was burned over. In other parts of the state, east, north, south and west fires have made their appearance. But in every instance where lookout stations have been established, patrol routes established and an organization effected such fires have been controlled before they reached dimensions sufficient to cov- er any materially large area. The full benefits of the Weeks law which appropriates $10,000 toward a system of fire protection and forest conservation together with the benefits of a like amount from the state, made doubly effective by the active co-operation of the Central West Virginia Fire Protective Association, now becomes apparent. At a cost of one cent an acre members of the association have saved thousands of dollars per acre. The effectiveness of the new system has been more than ever demonstrated by the forest fires of the last two weeks, and as a result the successful efforts of the association in connection with the steps taken by the state and federal governments have given considerable impetus to the growth of the association, increasing of course, its field of usefulness.

It is very important that the forests of the state be protected and conserved, not only for the protection of property values, but for the future of the timber and for the prevention of floods. More legislation is needed but such legislation must be supplemented by individual effort and co-operation and by association activity. Citizens can help by exercising greater care; hunters can help by being more careful; farmers and small timber owners can and should protect themselves by joining the association at a very small cost and by lending their moral assistance. Timber is being rapidly cut out but in the past millions of feet of timber have been destroyed by fires which raged beyond control, destroying even the young timber. With the realization of these things comes greater effort toward lending a hand for the protection and conservation of one of the state's greatest resources.

WINE CROP

In Alsace-Lorraine is Poor This Year, Due to the European Struggle.

(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)
BERLIN, Nov. 18.—Germany's best wine-producing district, Alsace-Lorraine, has suffered heavily by the war, and it is claimed that the output this year will be far below normal. Alsace, especially, has a poor crop, according to reports. Not alone had the bad seasons of the last ten years caused a reduction of the area of vineyards to 108,840 hectares, a decrease of 108,840 hectares (or about 300 acres) since 1903, but the early months of the year were very unfavorable for the development of the plant. The vines are affected by phylloxera, which incessant cold rains made worse, and then, when hot weather finally came, the war broke out. In southern Alsace, where the valleys and hillsides of the Vosges are almost entirely given to wine growing, many vineyards were cut down in order to facilitate military operations, while others were trampled down during battles.

The result of this has been that the wine crop of Alsace will be approximately one-third normal. Conditions in Lorraine are better. Though some of the vineyards around Metz were cut down when the war began, the crop generally is plentiful enough to discount this. The quality, moreover, is said to be equal that of 1904. Good weather early in the season favored a good average crop, and, unlike those of Alsace and eastern France, the wine growers of Lorraine were able to give their vineyards all needed care.
